Milder interests, more attractive valuations

- The first batch of retail C-REITs, totaling c.Rmb9bn, is expected to be listed in late Feb
- Investor appetite has cooled vs previous rounds as evidenced by 1) higher participation from sponsors and strategic investors; and 2) assets priced at a discount to their valuations
- Nevertheless, the exit yield at c.4.5-5.0% should still render the initiative attractive to asset owners and more spin-offs may be on the way
- Recent unit price correction on land-use rights C-REITs offer an attractive entry point for investors – we favour GLP C-REIT (508056 CH)

What's New

The listing process for the first batch of retail C-REITs (three of the four REITs have submitted applications to the CSRC in Oct-23), totalling c.Rmb9bn in market cap (c.11% of the C-REIT space) has officially kicked off with three of the four names expected to be listed in late Feb.

Weakened interest with higher sponsor involvement.

Due to unresolved concerns over underlying asset performances amid a weakening macro backdrop, investor appetite towards land-use rights C-REITs has moderated, with unit prices correcting by c.21% in 2023 and in negative territory thus far into 2024. The performance has therefore weighed on investor interest for the new batch of C-REIT IPOs, with strategic investors having to take up a higher portion of the issuance (75% vs c.63% in previous batches of land use rights C-REITs). Subscription rates from institutional and retail investors have also fallen to 1.5x and 1.3x respectively (vs 80x and 151x in previous batches). Accordingly, the three retail C-REITs are priced at an average discount of 8% to their portfolio asset valuations (vs c.7% premium in previous batches).

Key asset metrics and valuations of retail C-REITs

Still attractively priced from sponsor's standpoint.

With most retail assets currently valued on the books at >5% cap rates, the latest IPO yields of c.4.9-7.0% (7.0% for a department store) would still deem it attractive for sponsors to pursue asset spinoffs under the C-REIT initiative. Aside from Vanke (2202 HK), Shanghai Bailian (600827 CH) and Beijing Capital Grand (1329 HK) that have already submitted their IPO applications to the CSRC, potential candidates may include Joy City (207 HK), Longfor (960 HK) and Seazen (1030 HK).

An attractive entry point for investors. Recent unit price correction for land use rights C-REITs have brought their average yields to c.5.4%, representing a wider yield spread of c.3.0% vs China's 10-year government bond that stands at >2SD above historical mean. GLP C-REIT's current valuation at 6.0% FY24F distribution yield offers a good entry point for investors.
